The British are fond of understatement and self-deprecation. You might hear 'It's rather warm,' when in fact the temperatures are over 40 degrees, and a best-selling writer might say 'I've had some success,' also reflecting the traditional embarrassment with success. This apparent humility is approved of by fellow British people, and many comedians and films use understatement, self-deprecation and extreme politeness as a source of word play comedy.
The British people are good at using understatement in jokes because .....

A) they often say 'It's rather warm.	B) they value humility.
C) they prefer hyperbole.	D) they avoid extreme politeness.

الحل والشرح

1 D) come up with 'Come up with' means to think of or produce ideas. Set out, hold off on and set up do not go with 'ideas'.

2 B) hold it against To hold something against someone means to blame them for it. The sentence says no one will blame you for not volunteering.

3 D) Our assignments have been corrected carefully by the mathematics teacher. The active sentence is present perfect, so the passive uses have/has been + past participle, as in "have been taken". Thus "have been corrected" is correct; "have corrected" lacks been.

4 C) understood The exercise is difficult now, so the wish is about the present: 'wish' + past simple, 'understood'.

5 D) treats / paediatric The verb agrees with the singular subject 'It' and the sentence is present: 'treats'. 'Paediatric' is the correct spelling, meaning for children.

6 B) they value humility. The passage says the apparent humility is approved of by fellow British people, and comedians use understatement and self-deprecation for comedy. So they use understatement in jokes because they value humility.

7 A) risk The verb risk is followed by an -ing form, so "risk taking his ship" fits. The other options (post, enrol, import) do not make sense with "not willing to ... taking his ship through the canals".

8 C) has been proved / dehydration The book's pattern is It + passive form of reporting verb + that, as in 'It has been announced that there is an outbreak...'. So 'It has been proved that' is the passive reporting form; 'had proved' and 'has proved' are active, and the other options with 'had been proved' carry a misspelled noun. Only option C also spells dehydration correctly.

9 C) negotiate To negotiate means to discuss in order to reach an agreement or a deal. Interpret, keen and conflict do not mean this.

10 A) as often as The pattern is 'as + adverb + as possible': as often as possible. 'As many as' is used with countable nouns.

11 C) variable After 'very' we need an adjective: 'variable', meaning changing. 'Vary' is a verb and 'variably' an adverb.

12 B) invention / ? 'Invention' is the correct spelling. The sentence asks 'Do you think...?', so it ends with a question mark.

13 C) had been The Past Perfect Simple describes a state that happened before a specific past time. The two days in hospital came before the wedding party, so Sami had been in the hospital.

14 B) I have told you a million times to clean your room! Hyperbole uses extreme numbers or amounts for effect, as in 'I've spent about a million years wearing school uniform'. 'I have told you a million times' does the same, while the others understate.

15 C) creation After the noun-phrase 'the process of business', a noun is needed: 'creation' (business creation). Create is a verb, creative an adjective, and created a past form.

16 A) shake hands When people meet for the first time, they commonly shake hands. The other choices do not fit as a general greeting.

17 A) for having friends The writer says that being sociable and gregarious is definitely advantageous for our minds and bodies, so the text is for having friends.

18 A) the/ the/ Ø The book says we use 'the' when the noun is defined by the words that follow, for example a relative clause. 'The teacher' is defined by 'I was telling you about', and 'the book' by what follows it. The last gap takes no article, so the answer is the / the / Ø.

19 B) the / Ø Use 'the' with river names (the River Thames) but no article with most city names (London).
